Florence Schust Knoll

As a protégée of Eero Saarinen, Florence Schust Knoll became one of the most influential designers in American history. She worked briefly for Bauhaus figures Walter Gropius, Marcel Breuer and Wallace K. Harrison. Her belief was in "total design" — embracing architecture, manufacturing, interior design, textiles, graphics, advertising and presentation. Her application of design principles in solving space problems was a radical departure from standard practice in the 1950s, but was quickly adopted, and remains widely in use today.
